

I am commenting on my concern of the impending Time Warner/AOL merger. I am now a satisfied Time/Warner consumer via their Road Runner High Speed Internet Access.

My only concern is that AOL does not have the right to limit the content in which I may view via my cable modem. Two years ago I cancelled mt AOL account due to the cradle to the grave attitude AOL showed to me.

AOL is well known for censoring newsgroups and running advertising in areas that their subscribers have already paid to view. Also their terms of service is completely unacceptable. The terms of service can be interpreted to say iif you type in chat room that Al Gore is a bad choice because he is a Democrat your fine, but say Joe Lieberman is a poor choice because he is a Jewish man, you will be banned from service.

My only hope is that these items will be addressed during the careful consideration of this merger.

Thank you.
