

Gentlemen, you are about to approve the merger of two of the worst ISP's on the internet. AOL promises their customers unlimited internet access, but gives only that part that AOL selects and provides software to access. They prohibit the use of third party software that would make the rest of the internet available.

Time Warner on the other hand does not censor the internet as harshly as AOL, but is rather dictatorial in enforcing their policies. Sort of like our government. "Agree with us or you will suffer"

Both load up the user with their favorite advertising that is not wanted or needed to access the internet, the service they sell.

I suspect this letter is written in vain. The merger will probably be approved, not on its demerits, but because this is a perfect occasion for those government agencies involved in snooping to make a deal and put pressure on you to approve.

Not that it will take much pressure for you to protect the governments political interests. I remember the bold actions you took during the 60's to silence opposition to government excesses during the integration turmoil.
