

I personally feel that directtv and Dish Network should remain their own companies. Dish Network as I have heard from many different friends, Previous neighbors and such, of course most only hear say, that Dish networks receivers are outdated and too bulky of course being twice the size of a modern VCR, and even some or most DVD players, as well as prices. As well I have heard most feel that Dish networks prices are out of range and requiring a credit card as well is unfair, whereas Directtv on the other hand gives anyone fair and ample opportunity of having satellite TV, although prices are mildly expensive, they still give everyone who wants it a fair chance at satellite TV. Respectively I feel that Directv should stay Directv. I am happy with Directv have been since I bought my system, considering the local cable company I would prefer to keep satellite TV versus going to cable which is really not a very good alternative around my area, it is fuzzy half the time most channels are unreliable and it is overpriced, as well as the fact that they only offer 3 movie channels that are overpriced as well. I would however consider being happy with this deal should it go through, if Echostar (Dishnetwork) give all a more fair and ample opportunity to prove themselves as good citizens (or individuals) and allow anyone who calls the opportunity to have satellite service, Lower prices on Dish 500, considering a person can buy a Directv system for most cases a single LNB, 1 receiver system for $49 and a 2 receiver Dual LNB system for approx. $98, (possibly reduced sale prices). But let it be known that I as a directv customer am happy with my service supplier, Being directtv. Thank you for your time and I hope and pray that my opinion helps with this merger
