

Dear Sir/Madam:

My name is Michael Mourgas and I live in South Lyon, Michigan. South Lyon is only about 30 miles away from Detroit, but believe it or not I do not have access to high speed internet service. Not through the phone company or through the local cable service.

We are subscribers to the Dish Network service and one of the benefits of the merger for us, just like in rural America, will be the access to high speed internet service. I can only imagine how frustrating it must be for those in small towns across the country that do not even have access to a dial up number. Lucky for us we do have that option, but we are quite upset about the lack of high speed internet service in our area.

This merger would have the following benefits for us: 1)access to high speed internet service on a national pricing plan. 2)The convenience of having just one bill for our satellite and internet service. I fully support this merger and will be sorely disappointed in our elected officials if the merger is not approved.
