I wish, by this letter, to reiterate my serious commitment to the purchase of the New York Post, along with an equal commitment to running the New York Post as a separate editorial product with a separate editorial voice.

I want to assure you that I am expressing a serious financial interest. Without access to the Post's financial information, especially the balance sheet which outlines the Post's liabilities, it is impossible for me to describe a specific price I would be willing to pay. If financial information were available, so that all the normal questions to any purchaser could be answered, I would be in a position to make a specific offer.

As to the separate editorial voice, I would commit to a separate editorial staff for all political and governmental coverage carried by the Post.

I would obviously be prepared to answer further questions to outline this in more detail.

Sincerely,

Mortimer B. Zuckerman
